Gamecocks look to bounce back after weekend loss

Drew Mueller
@TDG_SPORTS

The Gamecocks, after a disappointing loss to Clemson, will try to rebound against UNC Greensboro Tuesday. South Carolina won last year’s matchup 2-1, but Greensboro returns much of their production from last season. Junior German Christopher Reingen returns this season after leading the team with four goals, and sophomore defender Eric Gunnarsson started 19 out of the Spartan’s 20 games in 2014.

The Gamecocks journeyed upstate to face No. 9 Clemson Friday in hopes of clinching a second straight win against their rivals. They walked away not only scoreless, but also with a 3-0 loss, bringing their record to 2-1.

The Tigers dominated the game from the beginning. Its offense controlled the pace, and their defense stifled any Gamecock attacking efforts. While South Carolina’s back line and midfielders did well holding Clemson, there is always a point that some shots will go in. Though the Tigers had only four shots on goal, they threatened constantly with shots going wide or hitting the post. Junior goalkeeper Marco Velez had a good game even though he let in three goals. He was having to dive left and right for shots and commanded the box on all of Clemson’s 11 corner kicks. Of those three goals, two were off of deflections.

The Gamecocks lacked on offense, especially in the first half. The starting forward, senior Kevin Walker, didn’t record a shot in his 70 minutes of play time while freshman Bjorn Gudjonsson came off the bench and had three shots, but just one on target. Providing a spark for the Gamecocks, junior Koty Millard was aggressive once again, logging two shots, one on a goal and a yellow card.

CRIME BLOTTER

The blotter comes from police reports released by the USC Division of Law Enforcement and Safety and doesn’t include crimes reported by city or county law enforcement.

Crime Blotter: Aug. 31- Sept. 7

These briefs do not include every incident from the last week and suspects are presumed innocent until proven guilty. Information could change as investigations continue.

-Two officers arrived at Marlboro St. at 4:08 a.m. on Sept. 6 after a man on his way home reported that a two-year-old African American boy was seen wandering the sidewalks and standing in the roadway near an apartment complex. The officer was able to help the boy back near his residence where a neighbor helped the officers to find the child’s apartment. The mother was charged with unlawful conduct toward a child, but told the officers that she believed her son to be asleep in his bedroom after putting him to bed at 10:30 p.m. The mother explained that her son does occasionally sneak out and leave the apartment to knock on neighbor’s doors. After seeing that the boy’s residence was safe and livable and that he was in good health, the two officers released the boy to his mother for the evening.

-A University of South Carolina student was charged with public disorderly conduct and possession of another’s ID after officers on patrol in Five Points noticed a physical altercation outside of Bird Dog on Harden St. at 12:25 a.m. on Sept. 7. The officers stopped the altercation between the student and an employee of the bar and the employee explained that the student was causing trouble at the establishment. The officers could tell the 19-year-old Caucasian male was heavily intoxicated, slurred his words and smelled heavily of alcohol. After being apprehended for public disorderly conduct the officers discovered two South Carolina IDs, allowing the cops to add an additional ID charge to the case. The male was taken to Alvin S. Glenn Detention Center.

After launching the moped ride-sharing company, Scootaway, CEO, founder and USC alumnus Frank Scozzafava is continuing to grow and expand his startup in the capital city.

Anyone who downloads the Scootaway app on the Google Play or Apple App Store can rent a scooter at any of the pick-up/drop-off locations across the city for 30 minutes at the price of $2.99. Scozzafava said other than a few glitches and mishaps with the app, the company has received outspoken praise from students.

“We had a ton of positive feedback on the idea and the business itself,” Scozzafava said. “We have had some negative feedback about the app, but that was to be expected; we’re still working out the kinks. Everyday we’re growing and creating more and more pick-up and drop-off locations.”

Scozzafava, a New York native, came up with the idea while working for another ride-sharing company and also based on his experiences at the university and driving to and from work on a moped.

Currently, Scozzafava said they have 12 to 14 employees working for the company. He mentioned that most of those employees are USC graduates, current students or students at nearby Benedict College.

One South Carolina student working for Scozzafava is fourth-year integrated information technology student Jamal Suber. Suber’s major requires 400 hours at a professional internship, and he began working for Scootaway soon after they launched in May. Suber said the experience working for the company has been enriching.

“As a startup company no day is the same,” Suber said. “I’ve gotten a lot of different experiences whether that be testing the app and the mopeds, working with the engineers in New York to learn more back-end things that relate to my major and now I am dealing more with customer support in an engineer role, as well as assistant general manager.”

Avadh Rana / THE DAILY GAMECOCK
The startup is emphasizing safety.

Scozzafava said that although the company is gaining more and more momentum daily and becoming a popular ride alternative for college students, he is focused on safety. The CEO said people driving the scooters under the influence or not wearing their helmets are serious safety hazards that he hopes to enforce rules on.

“We’re starting a new campaign called ‘Scooters ARE NOT Toys!’” Scozzafava said. “You have to read and mark off an agreement on the app before you rent any scooter saying you’ll wear your helmet, you’ll drive responsibly and you won’t drink and drive. If you don’t follow the things in that agreement you won’t be covered by our insurance policy. Plus, if you’re going 30 and you’re not wearing a helmet you could seriously hurt yourself or die. If you drink and drive on one of the scooters, you could hurt yourself or someone else or get into serious trouble. It’s not worth it.”

Scootaway offers 30-minute moped safety training classes every Sunday at the Carolina Field House from 1 p.m. to 6 p.m. Scozzafava stressed how important these safety-training courses are for anyone planning to use the app or buy a moped of their own.

“In the state of South Carolina anyone can go into a store and buy a moped. You can have a revoked license, multiple DUIs — it doesn’t matter. If you plan on using the app or getting a scooter of your own, you need to have training before you drive it. Come out to the classes. The course is kind of fun — you get to go through obstacle courses and learn how to use the app, you get a free T-shirt, you get $10 worth of free rides. We also usually offer some promotion, like instead of $10 worth of free rides we might offer $20 worth. We want users to come to the classes and be safe.” Scozzafava said.

Scootaway has plans to grow to be a part of other major cities and college campuses nationwide, Scozzafava said he hopes to expand next to either Miami, Charleston or Myrtle Beach.

SHAG FESTIVAL CELEBRATES 2015 AS THE YEAR OF THE SHAG

Daniel Hou / THE DAILY GAMECOCK
Shag enthusiasts across the country were in Columbia to celebrate the official dance of South Carolina.

Kylie Tokar
@KYLIE_TOKES

You could hear the music from blocks away, but if you walked past the Statehouse on Sunday afternoon, you would have seen something unexpected. It wasn’t protestors. It wasn’t a political rally. It was 2015 Year of the Shag, a festival celebrating the South Carolina State Dance.

There were countless lawn chairs erected in the shade, occupied by members of the Capital City Shag Club, although none of them stayed there for long. A dance floor was set up at the bottom of the Statehouse steps, and there was never a time where at least one couple wasn’t out there dancing the day away; more often than that, it was absolutely full of excited shaggers.

Dressed in their Sunday best and glistening with Southern charm, the festival’s attendees were eager to show their love for dancing. Among them was CCSC President Otis Paris, who didn’t hesitate to share his enthusiasm.

“This is my first year of the presidency,” he said, although he’s been shagging for 15 years. “It’s an honor to be doing this for the first time.”

He proved to be a pretty good shagging teacher, too.

Paris also explained that Gov. Nikki Haley was the one who proclaimed 2015 to be the Year of the Shag. Apparently, Mayor Benjamin wants the event to be an annual occurrence.

The Sensational Epics, clad in matching Hawaiian shirts and led by lead guitarist Jimmy Davis, provided live music for the dancers. When they took a break, CCSC DJs took over. With each new song, especially the popular ones like “Sweet Caroline,” a new crowd of dancers swarmed the dance floor.

Marie Kiesel, CCSC Co-Chair, clarified that Sunday was just a continuation of a larger festival that the club had been planning for a long time.

“I met with [the Mayor] on June 30, and I told him I was reaching for the stars,” said Kiesel. “Yesterday, we had a street dance on Main and Hampton, and we had the shag contest. It was so fun. There were people from everywhere — shaggers from everywhere — and we celebrated dancing, which is our favorite thing to do.”

Football players suspended for targeting referee during game

According to USA Today, the two high school football players who were ejected following a play where they appeared to deliberately tackle a defenseless referee have been suspended from John Jay High School in San Antonio, Texas. The players could be facing charges, and Marble Falls, Texas police are currently investigating the situation. Nationwide outrage ensued after a video of the play from the Sept. 4 game went viral on YouTube and garnered national attention. The video clearly shows one of the players, safety No. 12 running straight into the referee, blindsiding him and knocking him to the ground. While on the ground, another safety lays out to tackle the official head-first. It is still unknown why the players targeted the official.

Kentucky Clerk of Court continues to fight judicial system

NBC news reported that Kim Davis, the Rowan County, Kentucky clerk who was arrested for refusing to issue marriage licenses, is continuing her legal battle with the nation's highest court. Davis holds to her convictions that gay marriage is against her Christian beliefs. Davis asked a Federal Court of Appeals Monday to let her out of jail after being jailed on Sept. 4. U.S. District Judge David Bunning found Davis in contempt for blocking multiple attempts by same-sex couples to receive their marriage licenses despite the Supreme Court's ruling in June that same-sex marriages are legal in the United States.

Rick Santorum makes appearance in Chapin

WLTX reported although numerous Republican presidential candidates had campaign presence at the 36th Annual Chapin Labor Day Parade, Pennsylvania Sen. Rick Santorum was the only candidate to attend the parade. Thousands were in attendance on Monday as floats from local groups filled the streets in downtown Chapin, South Carolina. Santorum also was in attendance at the Southern 500 in Darlington, South Carolina on Sunday.

-An officer was called multiple times to a house on Randall St. after a report of an intoxicated African-American man making inappropriate and sexually suggestive comments toward a woman walking on the street at 12 p.m. on Sept. 5. When confronted by officers the man was seen throwing a liquor bottle in a nearby dumpster, stumbling while walking, slurring his speech and drooling. The officer asked the man to vacate the premises and not return. In less than 20 minutes, the officer was called back to the same location as the man was seen yelling and carrying a big stick. The man was subsequently arrested and taken to Alvin S. Glenn Detention Center.

2015 Year of the Shag celebrated South Carolina’s state dance at the Statehouse on Sunday, hosted by the Capital City Shag Club.

SHAGPAGE1

Kiesel’s personal appreciation for dance comes from years of weddings with her family, learning the jitterbug, and eventually coming to Columbia and falling in love with the shag.

After the street festival Saturday, there was a spotlight dance in the Marriott hotel that evening. The amateur shag contest winners attended, along with 2014 National and Grand National Junior Shag Champions Jeremy Webb and Kayla Henley.

Kiesel described the collaboration as “the past, the present and the future of the shag.”

“Our club is unique,” Kiesel said. “We are known for our friendliness. We welcome you. We are so happy you’re here.”

More celebration of the South Carolina State Dance takes place throughout the year. The Capital City Shag Extravaganza is a three-day shag festival coming this April 1-3 at the Embassy Suites. 200 tickets had already been sold Sunday. It’s sure to be a collection of people from all walks of life who share a love for dancing.

Miley’s ‘dead petz’ inspire trippy lyrics

Reckless, impulsive 22-year-old Miley Cyrus released “Miley Cyrus and Her Dead Petz,” her strangest album yet.

Lauren Galida
@TDG_ARTS

“Miley Cyrus and Her Dead Petz”

C-

Release Date: Aug. 21
Artist: Miley Cyrus
Label: Smiley Miley Inc.
Duration: 92 minutes

Initially, I expected a surprise album released by the reckless, impulsive 22-year-old Miley Cyrus titled “Miley Cyrus and Her Dead Petz” to be atrocious. But I was pleasantly surprised by a few of the catchy, club-tailored beats, experimental ballads and even a song dedicated to her deceased pet blowfish, Pablo.

While these songs won’t make the next list of insightful classics, they’re definitely worth listening to, or letting loose after a stressful day. Cyrus has transformed from pristine pop (Hannah Montana) to hip hop (Bangerz) to a slower, more psychedelic vibe within only a couple of years, proving that she can own multiple genres and keep her fans anxious to see what stunt she’ll pull next.

“When I made ‘Bangerz,’ it was as true to me then as this record is now,” Cyrus said in an interview with The New York Times. “It just happened naturally in my head. It’s like anything — styles just change.”

This album feels less like a cry for attention from fans or a desperate attempt to rid her identity as Hannah Montana; it feels more like artistry and full, creative liberty to take this album wherever she pleases. Cyrus definitely delivered a smorgasbord of trippy, beat-heavy tunes and desperate ballads.

Songs like “Dooo it!,” in my opinion, mirror Cyrus’ scattered mind where she just word-vomits out anything that comes to her without really editing it or thinking about what she’s saying in the process. “Why there is a sun? And how do birds fly? And why there is a moon way up in the sky? Why there is trees? (Do it).”

In case you were wondering, she still doesn’t “give a f---” as she states in “Dooo it!” (ft. heavy auto-tune). Ravers at EDM dance clubs and Columbia students in downtown Five Points will soon chant this song in unison — its slow, disco vibe is transcendent.

Songs that seem out of place include: “Karen Don’t Be Sad,” “Something About Space Dude” and “Sunrise,” but with Cyrus, does out of place even exist? “Karen Don’t Be Sad” is a sappy, tired tune that you could hear at a karaoke bar where any random person could say: “I wrote this a couple minutes ago,

New ‘Transporter’ showcases fresh faces

Summer Neal
@TDG_ARTS

Released seven years after the last installment of the film franchise, “The Transporter Refueled” attempts to maintain the visual brilliance and plot depth that fans have grown to know and love. Set in the French Riviera, this mobster action film showcases the transportation business, love life and the exhilarating fighting style of secret agent Frank Martin.

Frank, once played by the infamous Jason Statham and now newcomer Ed Skrein, brings a fresh take and a beautiful face to the complex character. Audiences are reintroduced to Frank who decides to team up with his father Frank Sr., an undercover government spy. The introduction of a father figure into the picture adds another dimension to the franchise that fans have set to see.

There is an unmistakable chemistry between Skrein and actor Ray Stevenson, who plays his comedic father, that makes for some pretty heartwarming scenes within the movie.

Aside from the relationship built with his father, Frank also interacts with a sensual and mysterious female — a force seen in almost every classic action film. Played by Loan Chabanol, the character of Anna hires Frank to help her crew of killer accomplices transport shipments from a bank. However, this turns out to be the least of Frank’s worries. The rest of the film is filled with huge twists and surprising changes.

This fun installment gives the fans more background information on the actual characters and sheds light on the turbulent relationship between Frank and his father. It also gives Frank’s what do you guys think?” “The Floyd Song (Sunrise)” is desperately sad. She clings onto every word and layers multiple beats while this trippy tune fades out.

Soft, acoustic guitar matched with passionate lyrics compose “Something About Space Dude.” It almost feels like a dream sequence where Cyrus’ longing creates a hole in your own heart for something you didn’t even know you were missing.

“BB Talk” translates as almost a diary where she vents about her life in a conversational manner, and you feel as if she’s not the distant wack job who twerks and incessantly Instagrams about pizza. She talks about relatable relationship situations, emojis and calls herself awkward. Maybe for a brief couple of minutes, you’re friends with Miley Cyrus as she stumbles through this strange ‘80s pop ballad.

A song with so much potential, “Fweaky” — one where you could really be feeling yourself — is also one you want so badly to build and go somewhere but, unfortunately, it just remains stagnate and monotone.

“Bang Me Box,” funky and experimental, is one of the most coherent songs. Her voice owns the Miley-esque, mellow jam and her burning desire definitely shines through in the sensual, slow beats.

Just as the album begins to get repetitive, you can hear the chorus of “Milky Milky Milk” behind the crazy background beat and her electronic, outer space synthesizers.

This album is way too long, which is either self-indulgent or artistic, depending how you look at it. Either way, Cyrus has transformed into a somewhat respectable artist. I think we’re halfway there.

intriguing dialogue and remarkable action sequences that will stick with audiences long after the movie is over.

Common sense, safety important with mopeds

ISSUE

Scootaway wants students to drive safer.

OUR STANCE

Common sense is good for the community and moped renters alike.

As local startup Scootaway continues to expand, safety remains one of the largest issues for the company. While they debate how exactly to make customers safer drivers, we would like to offer some simple advice to students: respect other people's property and don't be stupid. Yes, it sounds like something you learned in kindergarten. But the lesson holds true today.

On the most basic level, not drinking or engaging in otherwise dangerous behavior while driving a moped can keep you safe by avoiding accidents. It is possible to suffer great physical harm, or even death, in a moped crash — even at low speeds. So following basic safety instructions could stave off injury.

Financially, it is also sound advice. While the company's insurance would ordinarily cover accidents, violating the terms of service means you could end up paying for anything that happens. The service is cheap; there's no need to waste money paying for a wreck. Furthermore, it is technically illegal, and avoiding fines is good for your wallet.

But setting aside all of that, exercising common sense keeps other people safe and happy. Poor or drunk driving can not only hurt or kill the driver, but anyone else on the road. Additionally, the mopeds belong to a start-up company providing a valuable service to students around campus. Frequent incidents could drive up fees or lead to an end of the service in the area.

Let's show the community and local businesses our best side as a student body. If not out of respect for others, for your own safety and financial self-interest.

Racial issues hinder Haley's VP strength

Ben Turner
Fourth-year political science student

In Washington D.C. last week, Gov. Nikki Haley floated the idea of running for Vice President in the 2016 election.

"If there is a time where a presidential nominee wants to sit down and talk, of course I will sit down and talk," she said in response to a question about her running on the Republican ticket.

This comes after she received national and international attention this summer while being at the forefront of events in Charleston and Columbia. First came her emotional response to the massacre at Emmanuel AME, then her call to remove the Confederate flag from the Statehouse grounds and finally her signing of the bill that ultimately achieved that reality.

Now she is being hailed as not only a rising star in the Republican Party, but as the face of the "New South" — one more tolerant toward minorities.

But a closer look at Haley's record suggests she's not the person the Republicans should run for vice president — at least not as an example of their party's progress on race relations.

Haley may have won praise for her position on the flag this summer, but not even a year before, she was defending the flag at the capital during the 2014

In the same event that she addressed her national ambitions, she offered a critique of the Republican Party.

"The problem for our party is that our approach often appears cold and unwelcoming to minorities. That's shameful, and it has to change," she said.

I think Haley took her own advice, shifting her cold, unwelcoming flag position in the political headwinds.

I would prefer not to mix race into my analysis of her ambitions, but it is difficult when Haley touts herself and her leadership as being a model on that subject while attacking other locales.

"Black lives do matter, and they have been disgracefully jeopardized by the movement that has laid waste to Ferguson and Baltimore," she said. "In South Carolina, we did things differently."

In the same gubernatorial debate last year that she defended the confederate flag, she referenced South Carolina's supposed image as a racist state.

"We really kind of fixed all that when you elected the first Indian-American female governor," she said.

I believe fixing racism takes more than electing minorities to office, especially when they support racially questionable policies. In 2011, Haley signed a bill allowing police to investigate immigration status during unrelated incidents, and she has defended controversial voter ID laws in South Carolina.

Indeed, Haley's career has shown that we are far from overcoming racial issues in America or in South Carolina. During her campaign, a Republican state senator used a racial slur against her. Soon after she won, she was criticized for previously registering as white on her drivers' license, partially because Indian-American was not an option.

Haley has done some good things on race relations. Obviously she did end up supporting the removal of the confederate flag, and this year she signed a law pushing for body cameras across the state after the death of Walter Scott. Although those were the right decisions, they were reactive ones in very politically charged climates.

It seems to me Haley is trying to capitalize on a new popular belief that she is a Republican with a great record on minority issues in order to play a dangerous game with race and politics. Ask President Obama how tough it can be to balance those two issues.

She may have the political skill to thread the identity politics needle and get to the White House just as he did, but I wouldn't bet on it. Republicans would be smart to just let her ambitions wither rather than rehash the difficult summer we all just witnessed here in South Carolina by putting her record front and center.

Potential Biden bid hurts Clinton, helps Sanders

Nick Vogt
Fourth-year public relations student

This past April, the "I'm Ready for Hillary" campaigners had no fear. Hillary Clinton was routinely polling as the top democratic candidate, and the nomination felt routine. Since then, it has been a long five months for the Clinton campaign.

No matter what the Clinton campaign tries, they cannot make her e-mail scandal go away. Their inability to move past these issues has lowered poll numbers and has brought the Clinton campaign to a halt, while others are on the move.

The key to the future of the 2016 Democratic nomination is the current Vice President of the United States, Joe Biden. While he hasn't yet announced whether or not he is running, Biden is currently polling in third place with around 16 points.

While another presidential run is still an open question for Biden, he has made some recent publicity moves. Yesterday, Biden jogged through a Labor Day parade in Pittsburgh to the cheers of "Run, Joe, Run!" This Thursday, you can catch him on the Late Show with Stephen Colbert.

Looking forward, Biden has reworked the State of the Union schedule to include official VP visits to New Hampshire, Iowa, and South Carolina. This lets Biden unofficially campaign for free. This publicity advantage may delay an official announcement but could seriously raise his support for Biden without depleting his funds.

So what if Joe Biden runs for president? Somewhere, a Clinton campaign staffer is sweating through their shirt, crunching poll numbers to answer this question. The news for the Clintons doesn't look so good. If or when Biden makes his announcement, there would be a noticeable spike of support in the polls.

Looking at the field, logic says that Biden will siphon a chunk of votes away from moderate Clinton supporters who may be on the fence about her candidacy. He's less likely to get significant votes from current Sanders supporters, but he may not need them.

If Biden were to take fifteen points from Clinton and another three to five from Sanders, the 2016 Democratic primaries would be a legitimate three-candidate race. In this scenario, Clinton would still lead the polls, but by a slim three points. In a close race, Sen. Senators would be sitting in third about ten points behind.

A tight three-candidate race wasn't what Hillary Clinton signed up for in April. While Clinton is only dealing with the e-mail scandal right now, more candidates would put more focus on older scandals. Other candidates may highlight Clinton's actions during Benghazi, her relationship with Sidney Blumenthal, and the Clinton foundation. Not to mention: Whitewater, Troopergate, Paula Jones, Monica Lewinsky, etc. The Clinton's have stocked their opponents' arsenals with plenty of ammunition over the years, and it manifests now.

With Clinton facing a tough road ahead, Joe Biden might be considered a favorite. If and when Biden enters the fray, he's a strong candidate to catch fire and take the democratic field by storm. But don't count out Bernie Sanders. In a tight three-candidate race, the fiery Senator from Vermont could utilize his superb campaign organization and oratory skills to make a surprise run. The longer Biden waits, the longer Sanders will continue to rise in the polls.

We will have a new college football champion before we have a democratic nominee for president, but this fall will make the race much clearer. It remains to be seen if Clinton can turn her campaign around, but at this point it seems like Joe Biden's race to lose. To make a serious run, though, Biden will have to take Clinton head-on. A Biden/Clinton primary race could get just ugly enough to split the moderate support base, giving Bernie Sanders an actual chance to win the democratic nomination.

Aries

Today and tomorrow favor fun and games. Watch for sudden and unexpected developments (or create them). Hidden resources get revealed. Get into subtle distinctions and refined techniques. Fix something. Meditate for peace and strength. Discipline and experience win.

Taurus

Household issues demand attention over the next few days. Consider all possibilities. Get coaching from someone who's been there. Act on an educated hunch. New directions appear. Get family feedback. Connect like-minded individuals for a power boost.

Gemini

Seize the day. Beat the deadline. You can achieve a lot today and tomorrow, especially with writing, communications, recording, publishing and social networking. Tread lightly. Learn from somebody else's mistakes. Provide leadership. Wear your power suit.

Cancer

List what you need, and budget for it. Today and tomorrow look good for making money. Keep track of cash flow. Expect financial surprises. Believe in somebody who believes in you. Disciplined efforts bear fruit.

Leo

You're especially in the groove over the next few days. The action is happening backstage. Dance gracefully with surprises and unexpected guests. Make promises and keep them. Gain strength from the past. Provide leadership.

Virgo

Watch where you're going. Pay attention to dreams and spiritual insights today and tomorrow. Look back for insight for the road ahead. Finish up what you said you'd do. Get efficient, and make it happen.

Libra

The next two days are great for parties, gatherings and meetings. Work with teammates. Friends offer new ideas and strategies. Creativity and discipline are required. Find an easier method to increase productivity. Collaborate with experts.

Scorpio

A rise in professional status beckons over the next few days. Accept a challenge if it pays well. It's an excellent moment to jettison old limits. Quick, decisive action is required. Watch for tricks.

Sagittarius

Educational trips and adventures call to you today and tomorrow. Prepare your next big surprise. Use stuff you already had to save money. Work out details. Craft your plan and wait for the perfect moment to leap.

Capricorn

Handle financial matters over the next two days. Consider property investments. Don't believe everything you read. Investigate an unusual suggestion, but don't get stuck with the whole tab. Watch your step. You can expect the unexpected.

Aquarius

Collaborate more closely with a partner today and tomorrow. Move quickly to get the best deal. A windfall is available, but may require spontaneity. No gambling, though. Share the load toward mutual goals and benefits.

Pisces

New opportunities arise and the workload increases over the next two days. Pay attention when using tools and equipment. Learn new tricks. Seek practical solutions and take action. Every step moves you closer to your desired result.

Originally from Iceland, freshman forward Bjorn Gudjonsson has played well thus far for the Gamecocks, putting pressure on opposing defenses with his fast-paced play.

SOCCERPAGE1

UNC Greensboro comes into the game with two wins against Longwood and Virginia Tech and a loss to UNC Wilmington. Its offensive production has been spread evenly, with five players scoring the five goals on the season. The Spartan defense has only let in three goals with senior goalkeeper Logan Rohde making 16 saves.

In its previous outing, Greensboro controlled the game against Longwood, defeating the Lancers 3-1. Longwood began the game with a strong free kick that needed to be saved by Rohde, but the Spartans came back down the field and scored their first goal off a pass from forward Jacques Francois to junior defender Nicholas Downs. Longwood tied the game in the 32nd minute from Willy Miezán's goal from inside the box, but the Spartans took their lead back ten minutes later. Greensboro senior Ben Burdon sealed the win in the 58th minute by scoring the third goal.

South Carolina will have their hands full with Greensboro's balanced attack. Based on their first few games, the Spartans like to rely on their many forwards to produce most of their offense. In order to slow down their offense, the South Carolina midfielders will need to keep possession and control the game better than they did against Clemson. The Gamecock forwards can't disappear for the second game in a row if they want to put goals on the scoreboard.

The game is at 7 p.m. Tuesday at Stone Stadium. The weather will be clear with a low chance of rain and moderate temperatures.

Gamecock offense ignites, downs 49ers

The South Carolina women's soccer team traveled up I-77 to take on the UNC Charlotte 49ers Monday night.

The Gamecocks took an early lead and did not let up in the second half.

South Carolina is now 5-1-0 for the season. On Friday against Colgate, senior Coryn Bajema and sophomore Lindsey Lane scored the only goals of the game giving South Carolina the win 2-0.

Entering Monday's game, both teams were 4-1-0 and coming off of wins. The 49ers beat Gardner-Webb three days before taking on the Gamecocks, with a final score of 3-2.

Senior Caroline Kelly was in goal for the Gamecocks in the first half and was relieved in the second half by sophomore Abbey Crider. Crider played the whole time on Friday in the win against Colgate.

Sophomore Savannah McCaskill sent the ball in the net in the third minute of the game. The assist came from junior Chelsea Drennan.

Three minutes later, sophomore Dominique Babbitt scored for her first career goal. The 49ers responded in the 16th minute with a header from freshman Ellie Deaver.

South Carolina led UNC Charlotte 2-1 going into the second half.

McCaskill and senior Stevi Parker took shots early in the second half but were unsuccessful. McCaskill had another attempt however in the 54th minute and made the goal from a left cross. This was McCaskill's fourth goal of the year and ninth of her career at South Carolina. McCaskill's second goal was assisted by Drennan.

Junior Daija Griffin added a goal in the 69th minute taking the score to 4-1. The assist came from Babbitt.

The Gamecocks will play Georgia on Friday in their first SEC game of the season.

Moore Recognized by SEC

Junior linebacker Skai Moore was named SEC Defensive Player of the Week, Gamecock football announced Monday. Moore led the Gamecocks with 10 tackles against North Carolina and added two end zone interceptions. The first of the two picks came on a third and goal situation on the Tar Heels' first drive. The second sealed the game for the Gamecocks at the 3:48 mark of the fourth quarter. Moore now has nine career interceptions. He is also seeking to become the first Gamecock since Tony Watkins to lead the team in tackles three years in a row.

Waldrop out for year

Backup offensive lineman Cody Waldrop is out for the season with a broken ankle, head coach Steve Spurrier announced Sunday. Waldrop competed for all three interior positions on the offensive line, but did not start against North Carolina. The redshirt junior was hurt when a teammate fell on his ankle during a drill during Sunday's practice. He played just four games last season due to a knee injury for which he had offseason surgery this spring. True freshman Zack Bailey is listed as the backup center behind redshirt sophomore Alan Knott for this weekend's game against Kentucky.

New Defensive Starters

South Carolina released its depth chart for Kentucky Monday evening. The Gamecocks will go with their same offensive lineup, but have two switch-ups on defense. Defensive tackle Taylor Stallworth will start in place of fellow sophomore Dante Sawyer. As defensive line coach Deke Adams likes to rotate his pass rushers, the change should be minimal. Sophomore Chris Lammons is penciled in as the starting right cornerback over redshirt junior Chaz Elder. Lammons was expected to start the opener, but instead backed up Elder against the Tar Heels.
